who we are

The Miller Family

From 2007 to 2012 Marlin and Lisa Miller, adopted their first three children, a preschooler on the autism spectrum and two babies with Down syndrome. They published the first issue of Plain Values in 2012 to highlight biblical ministries, share the beauty of adoption, and to cultivate anchored community. In 2018 they welcomed their fourth child in a surprise adoption, this time a baby with Mosaic Down syndrome.

The Magazine

Do you wish the world wasn't so "upside down?" We can't promise to turn it right-side-up, but we can offer content that will resonate with your lifestyle of authenticity, faith, and community.

Plain Values is a monthly print magazine, meant to lay on your coffee table, crafted with thoughtful consideration for real people such as yourself.

What We Believe

Our values are plain values, steeped in the rich traditions of yesterday. We enjoy the simple things in life; gathering eggs from the coop, getting our hands in the dirt to grow food, and cooking meals from scratch. Sometimes we sit around a fire and share life.

We strive to walk humbly to strengthen authentic relationships with our families and neighbors. And, yes, we have taken a fresh pie to a front porch and surprised a friend...we didn't even text them before! We just stopped by, walked up the steps, and knocked on the door! Just the way our grandparents used to do on a Sunday evening. They called it living in community.

We seek to serve our neighbors. Plain Values began with a prayer hoping to play a small role in connecting a child with Down syndrome to his or her forever family. We have checked that box nearly a dozen times in the last ten years and we will not stop until the orphanages are empty! We will rest in Heaven!

Our Community of Readers

The Plain Values community is, at it's core, a group of people who deeply value living life the old-fashioned way. They enjoy life's simple pleasures, grow their own food, cook meals from scratch, and serve their neighbors. Some call themselves "Homesteaders", others call themselves Amish. Together they create a community of readers with plain values, steeped in the rich traditions of yesterday.

Our Amish readers have a particularly unique way of life. They devote themselves to living out a simple lifestyle that's deeply rooted in faith and culture, often without modern conveniences such as electricity or motorized vehicles. Despite their simple lifestyle, they are very active consumers and sound business owners. The most effective, and often only, way to communicate your message to this group of people is by direct mail, and that's exactly what Plain Values does every month. The magazine reaches over 42,000 Amish households across North America! As our family of readers continues to expand, our Amish readers will always be near to our hearts.
